

Implications of Global Marketing

Stephanie Schweighofer-Jones
April 27, 2004

Xceleris[★]

Telling Your Story

- “Markets are Conversations” ***
 - Today’s are worldwide: Internet, Press, Int’l events
 - Global/local – each country is different
- Positioning and Branding are key
 - What you do – declaration of commitment
 - Who you are – relationship built by words, deeds and experience
- Know your competition
 - How does the competitive set vary market to market?
 - How do your claims resonate?
 - How loud are those claims being made and at what cost?

* Doc Searls, The Cluetrain Manifesto

- Reaching your Customer is different with each new market
- Reaching your Customer can be costly – need to prioritize

- Marketing is an extension of the business plan
 - Consider benefits of centralized vs. decentralized management
 - Consider trade offs in phased vs. rolling launches
 - Consider introduction of one vs. multiple product lines
 - Consider internal vs. external resources
 - Consider one industry segment vs. multiple
 - Consider launch costs vs. sustained marketing costs

- Marketing Roadmap
 - What are your resources?
 - Where will you deploy?
 - How will you deploy?
 - When will you deploy?

- Website Strategy
 - Technical implementation
 - Hosting; global/local; content management
 - Content
 - Localization; tailored content
 - eCommerce
 - Coordinated sales strategies; shipping and currency issues; etc
- Press & Analysts
 - Target key influencers
 - Pick your local partners
 - Familiarize them with you and your products
 - Prepare core materials: industry backgrounder, company overview, etc.
 - Launch – make your introduction meaningful
 - Get others to make your claims for you
 - Speaker's Bureau program
 - Events – participate and develop your own

Parting Thoughts

- World is de facto global
- Only one chance to make first impression
- Undoing confusion is expensive
- Assume success and plan accordingly